

HARBOR

A clearer way to run everyday operations.

Built around the work

A fictional operations studio profile.

Harbor is a sample business identity used to demonstrate a company profile. Its offer is deliberately concrete: document an existing process, remove unclear handovers and create a short guide the team can actually use.

This publication does not claim previous clients, qualifications or operating results. The work shown is a publishing exercise with a realistic information structure.

Three useful services

01 / Map

Record the current process in the order it happens. Identify where a person waits for a decision, information or approval.

02 / Simplify

Remove duplicate steps and make responsibilities explicit. Keep changes small enough to test with the team before expanding them.

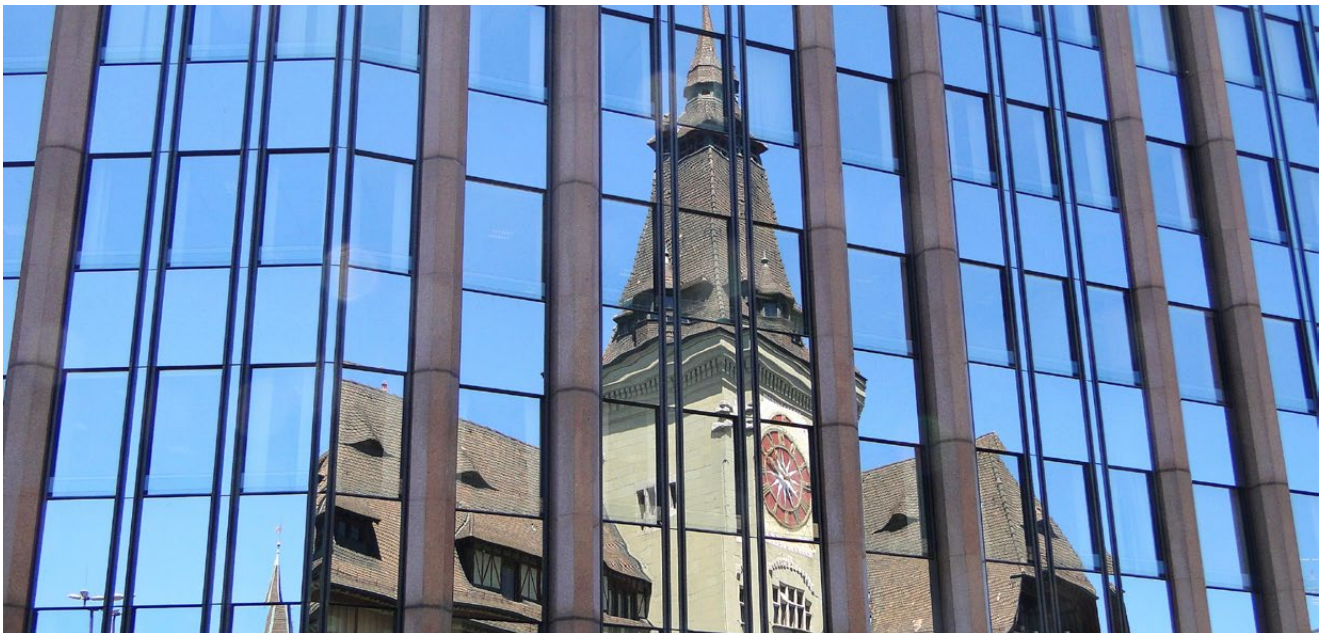

03 / Equip

Create a concise operating guide with examples, clear owners and a place to record questions.

A practical engagement

Scope each stage before work begins.

Stage	Output	Review
Discovery	Process notes	Confirm boundaries
Draft	Workflow guide	Team review
Pilot	Test log	Resolve questions
Handover	Final handbook	Named owner

Good handovers travel well.

A document should make sense to someone who was not in the workshop. Use a short introduction, a named owner and examples of the decisions the reader will meet. Keep revision history visible so the team can tell which version is current.

Make the next step clear.

Company profile study with a defined service structure and editable process information.

PHOTOGRAPHY / architecture: Adam Jones, Ph.D. / CC BY-SA 3.0 / https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Old_Town_Architecture_Reflected_in_Modern_Facade_-_Geneva_-_Switzerland.jpg city: Gary Cycles / CC BY 2.0 / https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/File:Hanoi_architecture_-_H%C3%A0ng_B%E1%BA%A1c_Street.jpg

Images cropped in layout. Self-initiated publication study.